PRESERVES THE DEAD.

Missouri Earth Is Better Than Any Embalming Fluid.

A most singular fact in relation to the remarkable preservation of human bodies interred at Glenwood Springs, Mo., presumably by the chemical properties of the overlying lime strata, has just come to light. The old cemetery in Glenwood Springs, says the Globe-Democrat, was abandoned some years ago, when the town grew and enlarged its limits so that the burying ground became included therein, and a beautiful and romantic spot overlooking the valley was chosen for the homes of the dead on a mesa not far from the old burial site. When, a comparatively short time afterward, on account of the rapid growth of the town, it was decided to remove the remains of the pioneers from the old to the new cemetery, but little attention was given the matter beyond that shown by the local authorities in seeing that the work of disinterment was properly carried out, which was left in charge of the sexton. There were about thirty bodies to remove, and they were all in time interred in the new cemetery. The work was done slowly, and scarcely anybody but the sexton and his assistants were present when a grave was opened, and when the remains were taken out they were not disturbed but left inclosed in the coffin, which were found in a remarkable state of preservation, considering the fact that they had been buried, in many cases, from five to seven years. This finally led to an inspection by the sexton, out of mere curiosity, of one of the bodies, and great was his surprise to find the remains in the condition of those that had only been interred but a short time—that is, before decomposition had set in. The body was not shrunken nor in any way changed, apparently, from what it was when first buried, but, on the contrary, the flesh was soft, the limbs pliable, and the features as natural as life. Many of the other bodies in fact all of those that were exhumed after the condition of the one mentioned was discovered, were found to be in the same extraordinary state of preservation.

THE KHEDIVIA.

A Woman Who Was the Sole Wife of the Late Khedive.

The foremost wife of the late Khedive of Egypt, formerly known as the Khedivial, is worthy of considerable notice, as being in advance both of her age and her period, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. Her royal husband did not, by any means neglect his harem, but more than any sovereign of his class he devoted her above the common rank. Up to 1878 she had never seen a man save the Khedive, and the first that she did see, save him, was a photographer. She was pretty, and she wanted the world to know it. A little later—in 1889—an American lady, who had some considerable reputation as an artist, was employed to paint her portrait. It is from this picture that current representations of her face mostly come. She made and insisted upon some startling departures from the habits of her race, and yet they did not go so very far. She never "received" with her royal husband. When he gave a ball she could only look through the lattice. But she gave audience constantly to women, talking French only and exhibiting both charming manners and a bright mind. In 1889 she was described by one who saw her as thirty-one years old and complaining that she was "getting fat and very old"—"a plump, round face, still lovely enough in a slightly heavy way, with liquid brown eyes, a pretty, pointing mouth and a dimple in the chin—unmistakably, however, a double chin." "One sometimes met her with the whole harem driving in close carriages, out to the desert. To contemplate the monumental pyramids and to guess at the riddle of the sphinx? Dear, no! To sit and eat bonbons, each out of her embroidered bag." The portrait can be seen in Cairo—"a rich, warm color scheme of golden browns in the fur-trimmed velvet robe, with yellow lace inside pearls in the dark, braided hair; a face that not infrequently suggests the hour of the Koran, and a hand which, though delicately formed, seems more that of a baby than an empress."

An Historic Horse's Hoof.

A very interesting relic has fallen into the possession of the well-known Birmingham physician, Sir James Sawyer, says London Tid-Bits. It is one of the hoofs of the identical horse that Lord Cardigan rode in the charge of the light brigade. Lady Sawyer's father, who was a Lincolnshire squire, received this precious relic of the historic charge from Lord Cardigan, and it bears an inscription to this effect. The four hoofs are now disposed of as follows: The prince of Wales, an honorary colonel of the Tenth Hussars, has one; another belongs to the officers of that famous regiment, and it is brought out at mess on state occasions; the countess of Cardigan owns a third, and the last, which is the off hind hoof, graces the sideboard of Sir James Sawyer. It is beautifully mounted in silver and is naturally highly prized by its owner.

Kissing Away a Church Debt.

"You may kiss me for twenty-five cents" was the legend borne on six cards suspended by six strings tied around the necks of six pretty girls at a church fair at Burns, Mich., one night lately. When the curtain was drawn displaying the aggregation of tempting sweetness within the reach of all who possessed the necessary quarter, there was a temporary, painful, blushing pause, broken soon by resounding smacks, giggling and the jingle of coin. The show lasted only a few minutes, owing to the objections of some of the matrons present, but the church debt was wiped out.

FACT AGAINST FICTION.

The Misleading Character of Circumstantial Evidence.

There is no fragment of the imagination—if it is all within the limits of possibilities—more curious or strange than some things that actually happen. The following is an instance in proof of this:

A few years ago Frank Millet, the well-known artist, war correspondent and story writer, published a short story in a leading magazine which had as its principal feature the mysterious killing of a Parisian artist in his own studio, says the Detroit Free Press. A web of circumstantial evidence led to the arrest of a model who had been in the habit of posing for him. But through some chain of circumstances which the writer of this has now forgotten the murder, if murder it can be called, was found to have been caused by the discharge of a firearm through the force of capillary attraction. The firearm was used by the artist as a studio accessory and was hung in such a manner that he was directly in line with it. Its discharge occurred when he was alone in his studio.

The story was a vivid and ingenious flight of the imagination. Now for its parallel in fact:

A recent number of the Albany Law Journal tells of the arrest of a man upon the charge of killing his cousin. The dead man was found lying upon a lounge about three o'clock in the afternoon with a thirty-two caliber ball in his brain. The cousin, who had an interest of one hundred thousand dollars in his death, was alone with him in the house at the time. The discovery of the real cause of death was due to the lawyer of the accused, who took the rifle from which the ball had been fired, loaded and hung it upon the wall and then marked the form of a man upon a white sheet and placed it upon the lounge where the man had been found. Then a heavy cut-glass pitcher of water was placed upon a shelf above. The temperature was ninety degrees in the shade. The pitcher of water acted as a sun glass, and the hot rays of the sun shining through the water were refracted directly upon the cartridge chamber of the rifle. Eight witnesses were in the room, and a few minutes after three o'clock there was a puff and a report and the ball struck the outlined form back of the ear and the theory of circumstantial evidence was exploded.

This is interesting, not only because the real occurrence is quite as strange as the imagined one, but because the fact came after the fiction and paralleled it so closely.

SAVED BY A SWOON.

An Unconscious Woman Sniffed at by a Lion, but Not Injured.

The circus gave Tecumseh, Ala., excitement enough on a recent Sunday to last for a year, says the Atlanta Constitution. Forepaugh's show traveled on four trains. As it is against the Georgia laws to run through this state on Sunday it was decided to stop at Tecumseh and feed the animals and rest. At all the stations there were large crowds and at Tecumseh there were several hundred when the last train approached. As it was slowing down one of the ferocious lions managed to tear off the door of its cage. Hector, which was the brute's name, thrust his head out right in the faces of a group of negroes who were standing on the platform. They could not have been worse scared if the evil one had dropped down among them. Hector made a leap, upon open mouth, into the crowd. Such a scattering and such yelling were never seen or heard in Alabama. Some of the negroes fell down in abject fright, but the most of them struck off for home on a hard run. A dozen tried to climb telegraph poles. One man sprang down a well. Hector lit on his feet, but rolled over and over. When he got up there was hardly a man, woman or child within fifty yards. One woman, though, who had fainted was lying near the lion. With one bound he was on her, his ugly teeth showing and his tongue rolling out. The people who were looking on were horrified. The tamer was a long way off and there was no one near with a pistol or rifle. To attempt to rescue her would be almost certain death. To the astonishment of everyone the beast, instead of mauling the woman, simply sniffed the body, turned it over with his paws, and after eyeing it suspiciously walked off leisurely. He thought that the woman was dead. Hector was recaptured and recaged without trouble.

DYING BY INCHES.

How a Man Felt Who Suffered from Progressive Paralysis.

A Los Angeles physician told us the other day, says the Pomona Progress, that the most trying time in all his experience was during the past five weeks, when he stood helplessly by and saw a poor ranchman near Puente die by inches of what is known as progressive paralysis.

The patient was first taken in one bite. In a short time the limb was paralyzed to the knee. Two physicians were called, and all the known remedies were applied to stay the progress of the debilitating attack, but in vain. Hour by hour death moved up its victim. The patient was propped up in an armchair and fully realized his condition. He awaited the end with the coolness and bravery of a martyr. As the line of death crept nearer and nearer his heart he made calculations as to how much longer he could live. He said: "Now it has reached the body," indicating the exact place with his finger. In a little while he said: "It has reached the bottom of my lungs." Another short wait and he said, faintly: "It has touched my heart," and he fell over dead.

Cries of Seals and Hares.

The cries of none of the animals approach more closely that of the human voice than those of seals when lamenting the loss or capture of their young. They emit a wailing and affecting cry, similar to that of a woman in deep grief. The cry of a wounded hare resembles that of a child in distress. Its piercing shriek can, on a still night, be plainly heard at a distance of more than a mile.

Photographing with a Slide.

A remarkable invention has just been announced in Vienna. It is a complete miniature apparatus for taking photographs in a rifle. The apparatus closing itself every time a shot is fired. The photograph will show the object aimed at in a circular picture in the center of which is the shot.

A NEW TYPEWRITER!

International.

A strictly first-class machine. Fully warranted. Made from the very best material, by skilled workmen, and with the best tools that have ever been devised for the purpose. Warranted to do all that can be reasonably expected of the very best typewriter extant. Capable of writing 150 words per minute—or more—according to the ability of the operator. A machine that will manifold more than double the number of sheets than any other typewriter without affecting the alignment in any respect, as on this machine the alignment is indestructible.

Price, - $100.00.

If there is no agent in your town, address us on the subject, as we are more liberal with our agents than any other company in our line.
